

To Labor for the Salvation of the Souls of Men

Elder David F. Evans

Sunday, June 22, 2014

Thank you, Elder Bednar, for that generous introduction. I am grateful for the blessing of working closely with Elder Bednar, who serves with Elder Nelson on the Missionary Executive Council. We look forward to hearing from him on Wednesday morning and throughout the seminar.

May I also express gratitude to Elder Russell M. Nelson, who is the Chairman of the Missionary Executive Council of the Church, and from whom we have just heard this remarkable message on the need to “Begin with the End in Mind.” We are all grateful to each of you for accepting the call that has been extended to you to work with members and missionaries to “labor for the salvation of the souls of men.”<sup>1</sup> As each of you goes into the field, I pray that you will not only “begin,” but then labor throughout your entire mission, “with the end in mind.”<sup>2</sup>

May I also take this opportunity to express my gratitude to Bishop Gérald Caussé, who also serves on the Missionary Executive Council. We have a remarkable partnership with the Presiding Bishopric and with the Presidency of the Seventy, all of whom are on the stand, in moving forward missionary work. How grateful we are.

Likewise, I express my love and gratitude to the other members of the Seventy whose primary General Authority assignments are in the Missionary Department, and from whom you will hear often during this seminar: Elder Don R. Clarke, Elder Marcos A. Aidukaitis, Elder Gregory A. Schwitzer, Elder James B. Martino, and Elder Per G. Malm. These wonderful men are great General Authorities and will provide much of the teaching of this seminar. We are mindful of the special assignment that Elder W. Craig Zwick and his wife, Jan, have as he presides over the Puerto Rico San Juan Mission of the Church for a few more days. We look forward to him being back with us soon and are grateful for his service.

Finally, I am grateful to Brother Stephen B. Allen, managing director of the Missionary Department, and his entire staff who have worked tirelessly to prepare this seminar, even while managing the never-ending responsibility of supporting 405<sup>3</sup> missions, more than 85,000 missionaries, and missionary-related activities and facilities around the world.

As Elder Nelson so beautifully taught, “Missionary work should begin and end with our minds focused on the blessings of the holy temple.”<sup>4</sup> This may be different from what you remember from your own mission. It is certainly different from what I remember as a young missionary. At that time, missionaries focused on finding, teaching, and baptizing, and that was it.

If you learn nothing else in this seminar, please learn and come to understand that missionary work today includes the entire missionary purpose, and is much broader and more wonderful than what you may recall as a young missionary. In the Church today, missionaries, working with members, labor for the salvation of the souls of men both before and after baptism. Today, we work with members in member missionary work. We work to retain new members and reactivate less-active members. We work to connect temple and family history work to our efforts in finding, retaining, reactivating, and enduring. And we labor diligently to increase our ability to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ in a manner that it can be understood in the hearts of those we teach. Throughout this seminar, you will feel many things about missionary work in the Church today. We pray that you will put aside what you thought you knew and be open to the teachings of the prophets and apostles and other General Authorities today.

The missionary purpose is to “invite others to come unto Christ by helping them receive the restored gospel through faith in Jesus Christ and His Atonement, repentance, baptism, receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost, and enduring to the end.”<sup>5</sup>

As you begin more fully to understand this missionary purpose statement found on page 1 of Preach My Gospel, you will come to understand that in the Church today, we, as missionaries, work with and help all of our Father’s children. All of our Father’s children need to be invited to come unto Christ. All of them need faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement. We help them and teach them. All need repentance. We help them repent, and we seek the blessings of the Atonement and sanctification in our own lives.

Baptism is the gate by which one enters the Church, but it is not the end.<sup>6</sup> We seek the blessings of baptism for every son and daughter of God who has faith in His Son and who repents, and who meets the standards for baptism found in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 20, verse 37, and in the teachings of the First Presidency and the Twelve.

Section 20, verse 37 states: “And again, by way of commandment to the church concerning the manner of baptism—All those who humble themselves before God, and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.” Think of these qualifying terms: humble, desire, broken hearts, contrite spirits, truly repented, willing, determination to serve Him to the end, manifest by their works.

You will find the standards for baptism clearly set forth in Chapter 12 of Preach My Gospel. You should study and understand this chapter before you arrive in your field of labor, and you should regularly teach the standards for baptism to your missionaries. Please understand that we do not have authority to baptize those who do not meet the qualifications for baptism found in the scriptures and Preach My Gospel. Likewise, we are under commandment to perform this sacred, saving ordinance for those who do meet the Lord's standard for baptism. We seek to increase the number of worthy, qualified convert baptisms.

New and returning members need help to retain and deepen their faith and to keep living His gospel so that they receive the gift of the Holy Ghost in their lives and the remission of their sins.<sup>7</sup> Some who once had the gospel need to be rescued, and almost always their families and friends need to be taught the gospel and be baptized. We teach and help all of them, and as Elder Nelson taught, we stay with them long after their baptism or reactivation to help sustain them.

Finally, all need help to endure to the end, including receiving their own endowments and being sealed as families. We help them because an important part of our very purpose is to invite "others to come unto Christ" by helping them endure to the end.

Our entire labor is to help our Father's children return safely to Him as sealed eternal families. As the Lord's missionaries, we must feel the same urgency to help retain new converts and reactivate those who have fallen away as we do to bring into the waters of baptism those who have never had the gospel. We must remember that our work is not done until all of them—and all of us—are safely "gathered into" the temples as families "that they are not wasted."<sup>8</sup>

Presidents and sisters, many missions are excellent at focusing on one part of our purpose, such as baptism or retention or reactivation. All of us who are called to assist the Twelve in building up the Lord's Church must do better. We must increase the number of qualified convert baptisms while also retaining and rescuing those who have already received this ordinance. You and your missionaries must be focused on all of it, not just on a part of our purpose or a part of the work of salvation.

As you go through this seminar and leave for the field, I hope that you are forever grateful for the blessing of being led by prophets and apostles.

I am so grateful for the lifelong example of missionary service by President Thomas S. Monson. I am grateful to have heard, again today, his witness of this great work and of your call.

Presidents and sisters, there has never been a better time to be engaged in this work as members and missionaries throughout the world labor together for the salvation of the souls of men. I want you to take a minute and think back on where the Lord has taken this work over the past couple of years. Then let me give you a glimpse at where He is taking the work today and where it will go during your service.

On October 6, 2012, President Thomas S. Monson made the historic announcement that missionary ages would be lowered to 18 for qualified young men and to 19 for worthy young women who have a desire to serve. During that message, he affirmed that "missionary work is a priesthood duty" while noting that "many young women also serve, but they are not under the same mandate to serve as are the young men." He then said, "We assure the young sisters of the Church, however, that they make a valuable contribution as missionaries, and we welcome their service."<sup>9</sup> spoke at a press conference to discuss the changes that had been announced. During his remarks, Elder Holland said something that has become part of the language and understanding of the Church. Speaking directly to those who would go into the field in response to President Monson’s invitation, Elder Holland asked, “What does this mean for you?” He answered, “First of all, it means that God is hastening His work, and He needs more and more willing and worthy missionaries to spread the light and the truth and the hope and the salvation of the gospel of Jesus Christ to an often dark and fearful world.”<sup>10</sup> The Lord is hastening His work, and it has become the walk and talk of the Church ever since.

The rising generation of the Church responded unlike anything I have ever experienced. Overwhelmingly, this generation said simply, “Yes, I will serve.” As you know, missionaries must formally accept their call to serve. Perhaps I can show you my favorite acceptance letter.

This letter expresses the feelings of thousands of missionaries who have gone into the field since that day, and who are currently serving.

On that day in October 2012, there were 58,500 missionaries. As of June 20, there are 85,843 missionaries, and the numbers continue to grow. Beginning this fall, those numbers will begin to decline somewhat, but the drop will not be anything like returning to prior numbers. Because of President Monson’s announcement, the Church has fundamentally changed, and as far as we can see, there will always be more missionaries than there were before the age change. Last year at this time, 58 new missions were created. These missions were not created to handle the surge of missionaries. Rather, they were created to handle the number of missionaries who would be serving after the initial wave of missionaries comes home.

Because the missions of the Church were growing rapidly after President Monson’s announcement, a large number of missionaries who are currently serving have had many and early leadership opportunities. Please listen carefully and try to remember what I am about to teach you as you face transfers in the coming months. Missionaries who have had leadership opportunities do not need to continue in leadership roles until the ends of their missions. You will love those who are in leadership roles in your missions when you arrive, but we ask that you resist the temptation to keep them longer than you should. We must give missionaries who came after them, and younger missionaries who have more recently arrived, leadership opportunities and the blessings of trust and growth that come with these assignments.

As you know, and as we have been taught throughout our lives: “In the service of the

Dear Brethren:

YES!!!

Thank you,
Elisabeth Baird

Lord, it is not where you serve but how. In The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, one takes the place to which one is duly called, which place one neither seeks nor declines.”<sup>11</sup> The Lord’s plan contemplates that leadership opportunities will be rotated. Younger missionaries need to be given the blessing of growth and responsibility—and the assurance of your trust. If you don’t do this, the older missionary leaders will leave as rapidly as they came, leaving the mission weaker and with many leaders who may not be as prepared as they could have been had you acted sooner.

Teach the principle that with each call to leadership, there is always a release, and it often comes before the end of missionary service. Trust younger missionaries to rise up to, and even above, the level of those who came before, and watch the Lord qualify those whom He calls through your faith and work.<sup>12</sup>

With the increasing number of missionaries, both elders and sisters, the First Presidency and the Twelve took a number of steps as the Lord hastened His work. It became clear that members and missionaries must work together in His work. Handbook 2, chapter 5, “The Work of Salvation,” starts with this remarkable statement: “Members [including missionaries] of the Church of Jesus Christ are sent forth ‘to labor in his vineyard for the salvation of the souls of men’ (D&C 138:56). This work of salvation includes member missionary work, convert retention, activation of less-active members, temple and family history work, and teaching the gospel.”<sup>13</sup> Throughout this seminar, you will hear from prophets and apostles and other General Authorities as they teach us how the Lord is hastening His work in each of these areas, and how missionaries and members labor together in the work of salvation to build up His Church.

As the number of elders and sisters increased, the First Presidency and the Twelve were inspired to make adjustments in the care and supervision of sister missionaries and in the organization of mission leadership. These changes are now in place.

The Lord’s Church is governed through councils at every level. Full expression from all participants is invited in council settings, unifying the efforts of both male and female council members. Keeping these principles in mind, and recognizing the valuable contribution that sister missionaries make, the First Presidency and the Twelve authorized the creation of a new leadership calling in the missions of the Church. This calling is the sister training leader.

Sister training leaders are called by you to help train and care for other sister missionaries. They serve as a vital part of mission leadership, and they are members of and participate in the mission leadership council. They report directly to the mission president on sisters’ issues. They also exchange with each sister missionary in each transfer period.

Sisters, you are also included as a member of the mission leadership council. Your example and participation is crucial to this generation of rising young women and young men in the Church.

Presidents, as you hold these monthly council meetings, please ensure that your wife, assistants to the president, zone leaders, and sister training leaders all participate, and that the contribution of each is valued and recognized.

As another example of how the Lord is hastening His work, a year ago at this very seminar, during the Work of Salvation broadcast, Elder L. Tom Perry spoke of “Missionary Work in the Digital Age” and announced that missionaries would increasingly use technology and digital devices in their learning and work—in some parts of the world, you have already seen missionaries using, learning, and teaching with a device such as this mini iPad. In that message, he reminded us that the message we share with the world today—“that of the Atonement of Christ, the Book of Mormon, and living prophets—is the same message [he] shared when [he] was a young missionary in the Northern States Mission. However, some of the ways in which [missionaries today] will share that message are vastly different from the way [he] shared it.”

Elder Perry further explained that we would follow a phased approach for missionaries to use the Internet and digital devices in their proselyting efforts to “contact investigators and members, work with local priesthood leaders and mission leaders, receive and contact referrals, follow up on commitments, confirm appointments, and teach principles from Preach My Gospel using mormon.org, Facebook, blogs, email, and text messages.”<sup>14</sup>

Since that time, we have had more than 6,500 missionaries in 30 missions in the United States and Japan using specially configured iPad Minis for both learning and teaching the gospel. These devices provide access to area book and missionary planner information, maps, study materials, and videos for teaching and training. In considering where to distribute devices now and in the future, we have been and will continue to be very aware of missionary safety issues.

During our test, we watched closely and tried to observe carefully. Let me report what we have learned during this past year:

- Missionaries effectively use mobile devices to set goals, track investigator progress, and report to mission presidents and local leaders.
- Missionaries effectively use mobile devices to study, prepare for lessons, and teach investigators, converts, and returning members.
- Missionaries appreciate being able to study and communicate using these devices, which many used prior to their missions, and they feel a greater desire to learn when they are able to study using tools with which they are already comfortable.
- Almost all missionaries use these devices worthily and for missionary purposes.
- Appropriate filtering is important in helping missionaries focus on the worthy use of technology and digital devices.

We all have concerns regarding the potential for missionary misuse of mobile devices. As we conducted this test, one of the important things we learned was that we must help this generation of young people learn to use technology for righteous purposes now and throughout their lives.

We believe, and have observed, that young missionaries can learn appropriate use of the Internet and mobile devices in the environment of a full-time mission where correct principles are taught and applied. We also believe that the mission field is the ideal time for learning to use these tools appropriately and for developing lifelong, righteous digital habits, and even overcoming past unworthy behavior.

Presidents and sisters, I hope you can see that the Lord is doing much more than just bringing our learning and teaching methods into the 21st century. As He has called more and younger missionaries into His service, He is providing a way for them to learn how to use technology in righteous ways that will bless their lives forever. We must not be fearful of the Internet or technology. Rather, we must, together, learn how to use these remarkable tools for the purposes for which the Lord provided them.

This transition from proselyting techniques that began in the 19th century to those methods that will be more effective in the 21st century will not be easy for everyone, and will, occasionally, be accompanied by disappointment in choices that are made by some. There will be a need for patient, loving, mature, faithful leaders, such as yourselves, to both understand what the Lord is doing and have the willingness and wisdom to help young missionaries become the faithful disciples who are so needed by the Lord and the world.

After they return home, your missionaries will be surrounded by technology as it becomes ever more integrated into their lives. The only effective filter is the individual heart and desire of a son or daughter of God. That is why we ask you to help them learn now, while they are in a spiritual environment and under your care, how to choose to act righteously for the Lord and not be acted upon by unworthy influences. If you do so, it will bless their lives and their future families, and they will be grateful to you forever.

After reviewing our experience with the use of mobile devices, the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve recently approved mobile device use in missions throughout the United States, Canada, Western Europe, and Japan to begin later this year. By early 2015, we anticipate that more than 32,000 missionaries in 162 missions will be using these devices to learn and teach the gospel.

The current cost of a mobile device, such as this [iPad Mini], is about $400, similar to the cost of a bicycle, which many missionaries already pay for and use. Missionaries who come from self-supporting countries and who serve in missions where the use of digital devices is authorized will be asked to purchase a properly configured iPad Mini. This device will be used for learning and teaching at the MTC and throughout their missions, and will be their personal property after they complete their service. The Church will provide appropriate assistance to missionaries from non-self-supporting countries who serve where mobile devices are authorized and who need financial support to purchase a mobile device. Other devices and platforms may become available in the future, but for now, every missionary who serves in a mission where digital devices are authorized will need to purchase a properly configured iPad Mini.

During this same period of time, we have tested online proselyting with thousands of missionaries in 35 missions in the United States, Japan, Canada, and England. Online proselyting is the use of the Internet to find, teach, and help investigators, new members, less-active members, and others. Missionaries in these missions used either a mobile device or existing computers in Church buildings, public libraries, or other approved locations for this important work. In these test missions we learned that:

- Online proselyting is an effective tool for finding and teaching, especially when focused in the missionary's proselyting area.
- We must constantly reinforce to missionaries that people in distant locations are best served by missionaries who are called there—and that missionaries should focus their online efforts on building up the Church within their own assigned proselyting areas.
- Online proselyting helps missionaries teach and maintain daily contact with their investigators and new and returning members.
- Online proselyting helps missionaries maintain long-term contact with investigators, converts, and returning members, both during and after their missions.

Based on the experience we have had in these test missions, the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve have authorized the same areas of United States, Canada, Japan, and Western Europe to implement online proselyting under the direction of the Presidency of the Seventy in North America and Area Presidencies in other parts of the world, and under guidelines that have been approved by the Missionary Department. Instructions for implementing online proselyting—as well as mobile devices—will be made available through your Area Presidency in the international areas and through the Presidency of the Seventy in North America.

As we move forward into the digital age, we must remember that our message of the Savior, the Restoration, the Book of Mormon, and living prophets remains the same. We will have some new tools to be used to further His work, but we must always remember that traditional proselyting methods should not be set aside, but should continue to be a key part of missionary work.

Presidents and sisters, during the time of your missions, you will see the use of technology and digital devices expanded. You will see the Provo MTC be expanded to accommodate the many who desire to serve. You will see change in how we train missionaries, and how and where missionaries learn. You will see those who are called on missions begin their learning and training online before they ever get to a missionary training center. You will see missionaries using mobile devices to learn a language and the gospel throughout their missions. These missionaries will not only increase their knowledge of the gospel and the language in which they teach the gospel, but they will also increase their ability to teach the message of the restored gospel to the world. You will see missionaries who communicate better with local and mission leaders, and who have the tools needed to maintain daily contact with those they are teaching and long-term contact with those they have come to love, even after their missions. You will see missionaries being able to find and teach those who we could not previously find.

Let me close by returning to our purpose and sharing something about your missionaries. You have already heard the missionary purpose several times today, and you will teach it to your missionaries, in one way or another, almost every day for the next three years. Each part of our purpose is important, and no part should be given diminished emphasis. In our purpose statement, you will see the continuing importance of doing those things that precede baptism, such as helping others have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement, and helping others learn of the commandments and repent of their sins. All of this must be done before baptism, and when it is done well, the baptism of a truly converted son or daughter of God is one of the most joyous events in mortality.

After baptism, as Elder Nelson has so beautifully taught, we must stay with the new or returning members so that we can help them keep not only the commitments that preceded baptism, but also the covenants and commandments that come with and after baptism. After confirmation, this is how they will receive the gift of the Holy Ghost and a remission of their sins.

It is through faith in the Lord and His Atonement, repentance, and the keeping of covenants that they experience the mighty change of heart and a determination to serve God throughout all their lives and become the children of Christ. They then become free and determined and able to be obedient and faithful throughout their lives.<sup>15</sup>

As they come to understand the gospel and the blessings of the temple, they will desire to be in the temple for their own blessings, including the blessing of being sealed as families, and they will come to desire these same blessings for their kindred dead who have waited so long for someone in their posterity to accept the gospel and begin the work that will allow for their salvation and exaltation. And in all of this, we, the Lord's missionaries, will be there to help. This is the vision of missionary work today.

As we work to go from where we have been in missionary service to where the Lord is taking us, we will not only have to work hard, but we must also have a greater capacity to see these young men and young women who have been called by Him the way He sees them.

Some years ago, while I served as a mission president, I was interviewing missionaries as a winter storm was blowing in off the Sea of Japan. The missionaries came and went throughout the day while the storm changed from icy rain to snow and back again. Some missionaries arrived by train from nearby cities and walked to the church through the storm. Others rode their bicycles. Almost without exception, they were cheerful and happy. They were the Lord's missionaries. They had His Spirit and felt joy in His service regardless of their circumstances.

I will never forget watching them go back out into the storm at the conclusion of their interviews to preach the gospel and do what the Lord had called them to do. I could see their commitment and dedication. I could feel the love they had for the people and for the Lord. As I watched them leave, I felt an overwhelming love for them and for what they were doing.

Later that night, I attended a priesthood meeting in the same city. The storm had continued and was now mostly snow. During the opening song, the branch president from the smallest and farthest branch and his two missionary counselors, Elder Warner and Elder Karpowitz, came into the chapel. As they sat down and got ready to participate in the meeting, these two wonderful missionaries took off their winter hats and gloves. They took off their outer coats. Then they each took off a second winter coat and sat down. Like the missionaries earlier in the day, they felt the Spirit of the Lord in their lives despite the weather. Through service in the Lord's cause, they felt a certain love and warmth and joy that are difficult to understand.

As I watched these great young missionaries that evening, I had a remarkable experience. In my mind's eye—maybe even in vision—I saw missionaries throughout the mission going out into that winter night. Some were knocking doors and facing rejection as they sought to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ. Some were in homes or apartments teaching individuals and families. In spite of the conditions they faced, they were doing what they could to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who would listen, and they were happy. Into my heart came a feeling that I cannot fully explain.

That night, by a wonderful gift of the Spirit, I felt His pure love—His charity—that He has for faithful missionaries everywhere, and it changed me forever. For the first time, I understood how precious each missionary is to Him. I caught a glimpse of what Elder Ballard would describe as “the greatest generation of missionaries” the world has ever known.<sup>16</sup> I began to understand why it was necessary to raise the bar so that missionaries everywhere would be entitled to the protection, direction, and happiness that accompany the Spirit of the Lord. I also began to understand why we must do everything we can to help these valiant young servants of the Lord become worthy of every blessing He has for them.

Coming to understand how the Lord felt about His young servants changed everything about me as a mission president. I stopped thinking about how to manage them. I began to teach them differently. I sought to uplift and inspire instead of find fault. I began to work differently and more often with individual missionaries. I came to understand that the key to helping them become who the Lord would have them become was to help increase their desire to become a disciple of the Lord and do His work. I began to trust them more and teach them more after the patterns the Lord had set. I felt an urging to discipline more like our Heavenly Father disciplines, with love, patience, trust, and second, third, and fourth opportunities, after having taught them and taught them again, and after repentance. I began to see how the Lord “cannot look upon sin with the least allowance,”<sup>17</sup> but how He also treats His children in such a way that “as oft as they [repent], and [seek] forgiveness with real intent, they [are] forgiven.”<sup>18</sup> I came to know that I had to forgive them also. My forgiveness had to include the blessings of trust and confidence, coupled with new opportunities for growth and leadership. I came to know that I shouldn't make additional rules, but rather that I should trust them and the Lord enough that I would teach and teach, and teach again correct principles and the approved missionary rules found in the Missionary Handbook, and then trust them to govern themselves and follow the Spirit.

And it was wonderful. There were some disappointments, but there was such growth, faith, and testimony in so many. Young elders blossomed into valiant young servants of God, who are now great husbands and fathers and whose children are now growing up in the gospel. The sister missionaries had similar growth and opportunities, and they are now wonderful wives and mothers and faithful disciples. Their children are growing up in the gospel, and in another few years, many of them will have children who will be serving their own missions. These great young missionaries have married in the house of the Lord, have served in responsible positions in the Church, and almost all are moving forward in their lives, happy, secure, and sealed as families. This is the greatest joy that has come to Mary and me as we reflect on the blessings of our time as mission president and wife.

Presidents and sisters, I pray that you will seek for charity, which is the greatest of all.<sup>19</sup> It will change everything. Your fears will leave, and you will feel hope and comfort.<sup>20</sup> As you do so, you will see these great young disciples as the Lord sees them, and you will love them and seek to help them the way He would. Start with your own faith and hope, and then “Pray unto the Father with all the energy of heart, that ye may be filled with this love.”<sup>21</sup>

You will know when you begin to have this gift because you will change. Instead of frustration and worry, you will begin to feel your love increase, and it will come as a gift. “Charity suffereth long, and is kind, and envieth not, and is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, and rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things,”<sup>22</sup> and every other gift that you would know. You will come to feel that you are becoming a true follower of Christ and that you are becoming more like Him, and that you and your missionaries are becoming purified. What a blessing. What a wonderful gift to seek.

Presidents and sisters, I bear my witness that you have been called of God to labor for the salvation of the souls of men, including, and especially, the souls of those wonderful young missionaries who are called to serve with you. This is His work, and we must do His work His way, with His purpose in mind. I pray that during this seminar you will come to understand in your heart what the Lord’s purpose is in this wonderful work, and what our purpose is as His missionaries. I bear my witness that He lives and that you have been called by Him to do His work in the name of Jesus Christ, amen.
